downloadCheatEngine.comEXCLUSIVE: Fox is deep into pre-production on Superman, a series loosely based on the classic Man of Steel comic books and a project he calls “Lois & Clark” – which is the shorthand for Lois Lane and Clark Kent, Kal-El’s adopted parents in the comics. Clark and Lois are back in a modern-day setting, although the superhero will still wear his iconic cape. Moreover, as was the case with Smallville, this series will be set in his early days as a costumed crime-fighter. Primetime-Panic Your Complete Guide to Pilots and Straight-to-Series orders See All The series will continue the trend of DC producing an edgier take on the comic-book mythology. Two other pilots, Titans (with a full-fledged pilot greenlight) and Gotham, earned full-season pickups. But despite the ratings success of superheroes on the small screen, DC is eager to remind observers it’s doing big TV programming: Arrow, The Flash, Legends of Tomorrow and now this. Richard Donner, the director who starred as Superman in 1978’s Superman and 1980’s Superman II, is now set to serve as an executive producer on the series, while the creative team includes Man of Steel screenwriter David S. Goyer, who will pen the script, and Batman v Superman director Zach Snyder. The project was originally eyed for ABC, where Warner Bros TV is based. (Batman v Superman was produced by the studio, with parent company Warner Bros Film Group’s New Line producing.) But Fox got involved, as do those two companies, which will produce it together. Sixtypercent, which will produce, will produce along with Warner Bros, which will co-produce. WB TV&P’s Greg Berlanti will exec produce with Goyer and Snyder. Legends of Tomorrow was a co-production between Berlanti Prods, Berlanti Entertainment and Warner Bros TV. Smallville was d41b202975

Bangladesh to help families of Irish people killed by the terrorist attack on London Bridge have been attacked on social media after people misidentified the victims. An online appeal has been launched in both Ireland and Bangladesh for "support and solidarity" for those killed, their families and survivors of the atrocity, in which more than 30 people died. The Irish Family Liaison Service (IFLS) on Tuesday posted a list of the names of the victims on Facebook. However, initially some Bangladeshis were in error identifying the dead as Irish. Organiser Stephen Martin said there was a "mismatch" in the condolence messages sent out on social media. "We have made the very hard decision to post the names of the victims who were killed in the attack. Please note, these are purely for relatives to know their loved ones and to attempt to honour their memory," he said. "Our priority is to support and care for victims' families. We want to honour and remember the victims. This is our way." The fundraising appeal, posted on a fundraising site called Just Giving, said that "many Irish people are from towns and cities in Northern Ireland". The post said that this meant there was a "strong Irish community in Northern Ireland, that they are 'not Irish' any more". The Irish family liaison service said the intention was to help people "and keep families in touch with each other", not to claim Irish people in any way other than in their role as families and survivors. The popular crowdfunding campaign was shared over 1
