Studies on the interaction of the radioligand N-[3-(18)F]fluoropropyl-2-bromopropane, a probe for serotonin (5-HT) function, with the 5-HT-2A receptor. Investigation of the in vivo interaction of the radioligand N-[3-(18)F]fluoropropyl-2-bromopropane ([18F]FBU) with the 5-HT-2A receptor in the human brain using positron emission tomography (PET) and a kinetic analysis. The potential of [18F]FBU as a radiopharmaceutical to study serotonergic functions in vivo was investigated. The BP(ND) values derived from the analysis of dynamic PET data obtained after the injection of [18F]FBU in healthy human volunteers at rest and during a rest-stress paradigm were compared with the binding properties of N-[3-(18)F]fluoropropyl-2-bromopropane ([18F]FBP) in vitro using a transient expression system expressing the 5-HT-2A receptor in a CHO cell line. The metabolites of [18F]FBU and [18F]FBP, [18F]fluoropropanol, N-[3-(18)F]fluoropropyl-2-hydroxy-2-bromopropane and N-[3-(18)F]fluoropropyl-2-oxoglutaric acid, were determined in plasma and urine. [18F]FBU showed a higher affinity than [18F]FBP in vitro. The median value of the BP(ND) index at rest was close to unity, indicating a high non-specific binding of both radioligands to the brain. However, the median value at stress was significantly lower than that measured at rest. This could be due to a reduced non-specific binding of the radioligand at stress. Moreover, a higher fraction of the parent radioligand [18F]FBU was found in the brain at stress than at rest. Analysis of the metabolites showed that, after bff6bb2d33
