Suppose I have a sample of $20$

sample means, but I have no idea which group they are from. What is a good (number of the number of chance of getting variance of less than) percentage of the time that I should expect to the variance of the sample to be less than $4$? Can I calculate the probability, the way I would calculate the probability of getting a mean of $0$ or greater by using something like a normal/Gaussian distribution, and just assume the mean of the sample is equal to the average of the sample? A: The sample variance of $20$ equally-spaced samples of sizes $15$ and $5$ is $2$.
