The software you need to update your BIOS!Q: Find tabbed tab item in WPF Here is my situation: I have a TabControl with several TabItems and I would like to find out which TabItem is currently active. What I tried is tabbing over the tab items in the tab control and checking the IsSelected property of the TabItem.

But this only returns true if you are in the first TabItem of the TabControl. How can I check which TabItem is active? Is there a (good) way to do this? A: Where is your TabsControl and how do you check it? I don't know if there is any solution how to get the selected TabItem outside of the TabItem itself, but you could just get the currently active TabItem and access his properties. I don't know if it works on all platforms. Here is a list of methods to get you started: How do you get a reference to the currently active child window in a WPF application?
