Featuring the fastest response time for any application available today, Lightroom 5 is designed from the ground up to bring your images to life. Adobe has delivered the most stable, reliable Lightroom experience to date. I still really enjoy Lightroom. In my experience I find that the Corel software is a bit too cluttered and tool-heavy for beginner photographers. Adobe's product more seamlessly channels both beginner and expert in its user interface, workflow, and performance. The biggest issue right now for me is the issue of the update. It says it is 792 megabytes and I am still in the process of downloading it. It is sure taking a long time. If you are careful you can download the update while doing other tasks. While waiting for this update, if you have an Adobe ID you have to log in to iCloud to have it send over the update. It does not go through your computer. In any case, the simple mission of enhancing family photos – or the occasional client or teacher assignment – is difficult to do with Adobe Photoshop on the Mac, which is expensive. But when it comes to the iPad, I just changed my mind completely. Now that I've given it a fair trial, I've got more than enough elasticity to handle the already small file sizes, given that the enlarged or cropped file sizes are saved with automatic resampling to twice the original size. A wonderful time saver, even for those who enjoy more editing than this demo allows. A roll of film is nothing when you can work an entire batch of photos at once, enhancing your life's events on the fly. Things like editing your photos while walking around on an errand are a thing of the past – a digital camera is quite svelte, and makes a phone call on the way to make a purchasing stop a thing of the past as well. This program, via the iPad, is not just portable, but downright convenient.
