Italian postal workers have been attacked with petrol bombs while attempting to deliver a voting papers that could prove decisive in determining the country's future in Sunday's general election. Pro-democracy groups said the postal workers were trying to deliver papers in support of the protest movement in the country's main cities, which has been ongoing since last November, during one of the busiest days of this week's election. Protesters have blocked streets in all four main cities (Beijing, Hong Kong, Tokyo, New York) and are demanding free elections and an investigation into corruption allegations. Reports suggest one of the key papers the postal workers were delivering is the ballot paper for the anti-corruption group, Avaaz, which is calling for Prime Minister Matteo Renzi's resignation.
