More recently, Maoists in Maharashtra, in an alleged suicide attack in Hiriyur, have claimed to be the Salwa Judum backers. But the final arbiter is the village people. "In every village, everybody knows that the Salwa Judum is either Salwa or Judum. Those who support it are Salwas, and those who oppose it are Judums," says Swami. "Every village leader must feel so," he adds. Sanjay Hegde had started his career with a bang. In 2000, he was the first to resign from the Cabinet after a cabinet crisis and later the same year he had resigned as a Rajya Sabha member. For nearly 10 years, the man who had made headlines for his leadership in the drama of the Bahujan Samaj Party leadership battle, survived as the best known man in the party. Perhaps that was because he is a man with an enviable track record in governance: over a quarter of all the villages in Maharashtra have benefited from the massive rural development projects undertaken by the Maratha Development and Panchayat Raj Institutions (MDPPIs) he led. But then, he made a major gaffe that changed his fortunes forever. It was in an alleged assault on a village assembly candidate, whose nomination he had opposed. The post-election protest came at an opportune time for Sanjay Hegde. The first big test of Maharashtra's first Chief Minister's image as a potential prime ministerial candidate came that same year. 79a2804d6b
